

Revision.

Just do it.

Use these tips to help you create an effective plan for your revision

- Make a list of all of the subjects you study (e.g. English, maths etc.)
- Rate your confidence for each subject – the subjects you are least confident with will need the longest time allocated for revision. You could base this on the grade you got during the most recent set of mock exams
- Add on any activities which you have planned during that time. Make sure you do this for each week
- Work out when your best time for revision is – is it straight after school or are you better working after dinner?
- Allocate a sensible amount of time for revision. 10 minutes isn't sensible, but neither is expecting yourself to work for three hours straight every day
- Work out which subject you are going to revise each night – try to keep this consistent every week (eg Tuesday for Maths every week). You might need to revise more than one subject on some nights
- Write down which specific topics you are going to revise during each session. Decide these based on which topics you are least confident with for each individual subject
- Don't forget to plan in some breaks to avoid overloading your brain. This will help you stick to the timetable and make your revision more effective
